

One student dedicates his summer free time to his pet project

With all the time in the world, students are able to do extra activities that weren't in reach during the school year. For junior Ean Sherman, that meant he had time to work on his antique Volkswagen van.

"So far I've been doing body work but soon I will get to work on the mechanics of this tin can."

Ean Sherman ■ 11

Several undesirable tasks had to be done; for example he had to clear out a wasps' nest from under the seats and replace the engine, which was completely rusted over. He also had to deal with his own dad bumping into the van with his truck two times.

Despite these setbacks, Sherman was proud of himself for being able to work on it all on his lonesome. He planned to turn it into a party bus and intended to name it "The Tin Can." Sherman hoped to have it done by the summer of his senior year to create the "ultimate senior trip," which was to travel all over the U.S. with his friends.

"It will surely be worth it in the end due to all of the stress it has caused," said Sherman.

■ BevinCreel, HannahVial, ReneeBievenour

TRIM LINE

TRIM LINE

20
people like tennis

529
polled

112
people like gymnastics

62
people like
track & field

18
people like archery

28
people like volleyball

107
people like swimming