Since the beginning of the fashion world, it has been dominated by women. Fashion in the 1920s was characterized by the iconic designer Coco Chanel. Even when men were the most prominent designers, such as the 1950s with Cristobal Balenciaga, Hubert de Givenchy, and Pierre Balmain, the designs were still made for women's clothing. The runways have also always been filled with female models, with male models as a rarity. Overall, the matriarchy of fashion created an association of fashion with femininity, and therefore discourages men from nurturing an interest in fashion. However, not all boys have allowed this fear to barricade them from having style. For example, senior Garrison Wade takes pride in being fashionable in his everyday life and is happy to give advice about what to wear. If your style leans more to the streetwear side, here is Wade's go-to outfit.

"Shoes are the most important part of your outfit. I never rock the same pair of shoes two days in a row," Wade said. "I'd wear skinny jeans, ripped or not ripped, and I'd rock whichever shirt I'm feeling that day, and a jacket, no matter what."

If your style is more brand-name, hypebeast oriented, take some inspiration from sophomore Jack Brown.

"My go-to outfit is my Gucci shoes, all black jeans, and a sweatshirt that's Off-White, Supreme, or a top from Saint Laurent," Brown said.

If you like preppy or classy styles, junior Clay Morris exemplifies this look.

"I'd go for a layered look, with Chelsea boots, dark jeans, a sweatshirt with a t-shirt or collared shirt underneath," Morris said.

Even if none of these styles fit you, there are other looks and trends that have been popular:

"So far our biggest sales are from men's moto denim, with designs and destruction," said Pacsun employee Cassie Sumerall. "Other popular sales have been from '90s comebacks, such as Champion, Reebok, and Adidas."
